Close Race for Governor in Connecticut

Raleigh, N.C. - There's been a huge movement in the Connecticut Governor's race over the last month and the race is now a toss up, with Republican Tom Foley inching ahead of Democrat Dan Malloy by a 49-47 margin after trailing 50-40 in early October.

A look inside the numbers makes it clear that attacks on Malloy, rather than an increase in voter affection toward Foley, are what has made this race so competitive in the final days. A month ago Foley's favorability rating was $41 / 40$ and now it's almost identical at $41 / 38$. Voters aren't really warming up to him. But Malloy's numbers have seen a precipitous drop. At the beginning of the month he posted a stellar 50/29 favorability spread and that's gone all the way down now to 39/40, a 22 point decline on the margin in just four weeks time.

Foley has built a dominant lead with independent voters at 58-33, even as they simultaneously split almost even with their Senate votes. A lot of indys in Connecticut are clearly planning to vote a Blumenthal/Foley ticket. Foley's also seen a large increase in his crossover support, now taking $20 \%$ of Democrats compared to only $12 \%$ a month ago.

While the Governor's race is now looking pretty interesting, the Senate contest is not. Richard Blumenthal leads by a 54-43 margin. Republicans probably could have been competitive in this race. Blumenthal's net favorability is a +10 at $50 / 40$. Those numbers don't exactly scream invincibility and they represent a 30 point drop on the margin from when his favorability was +40 at the beginning of January. Republicans were not, however, going to be competitive with Linda McMahon as their nominee. $52 \%$ of voters view her dimly while only $37 \%$ see her in a positive light.
"The Senate race in Connecticut has drawn most of the national media attention over the course of 2010 but the contest for Governor is where the action is here in the final days of the campaign," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "Tom Foley has made a furious comeback and it really could go either way at this point."

PPP surveyed 759 likely Connecticut voters from October $27^{\text {th }}$ to 29 th. The margin of error for the survey is $+/-3.6 \%$. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
